To Whom It May Concern

In Session 2 of 2007 Dr Mahmoud Hamada was a Visiting Lecturer in the School of Actuarial Studies where he taught the Masters course ACTL5109 Financial Economics for Insurance and Superannuation. The class had around 45 students and covers the quantitative aspects of financial economics such as portfolio theory, term structure and derivative pricing.

Mahmoud is an excellent teacher and his performance on the student evaluations was excellent. He was well prepared and presented a well organised course.

Mahmoud also participated in the normal course administration and attended School staff meetings including the end of session course review. He had useful suggestions for improving the running of the courses as part of our course evaluations.

Yours sincerely
